Fixed Cost

A fixed cost pricing model offers a set budget for a project with predetermined duration and cost. The main advantage of a set pricing model is that it gives the client the ability to plan and create an appropriate budget. The fixed-cost pricing approach works well for projects with known needs and a clearly defined scope. Any changes will require a fresh contract and estimate. As a result, one of the most crucial elements of implementing a fixed-cost pricing model is determining the scope and technical needs beforehand.

Fixed budget pricing model:

- Well-planned milestones
- Clear requirements
- Speed & efficiency
- Low financial risk
- Fixed timeline

GET THE IQLANCE

Time & Material

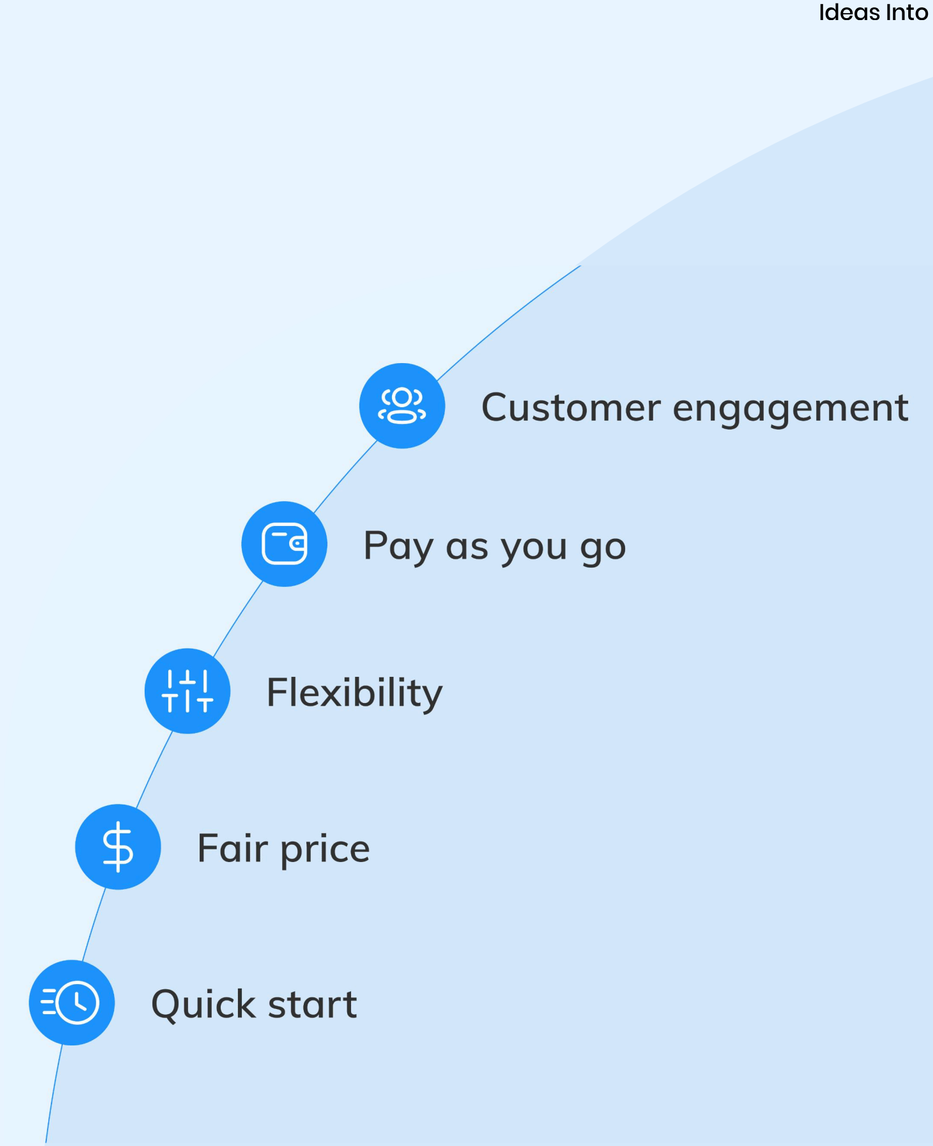

A time and materials contract requires you to pay for the actual time spent on the project, which includes both time and effort. The cost of the materials (effort) used in the project and the time invested in it determine the service charge.

This model is most appropriate for clients seeking a long-term project with changing requirements.

A time and material pricing model:

- A long-term project with an evolving set of requirements
- Projects in the process of scope investigation
- Projects that require maximum flexibility for the market situation
- Projects with the vaguely defined specification
- Projects connected with untested business models

GET THE IQLANCE

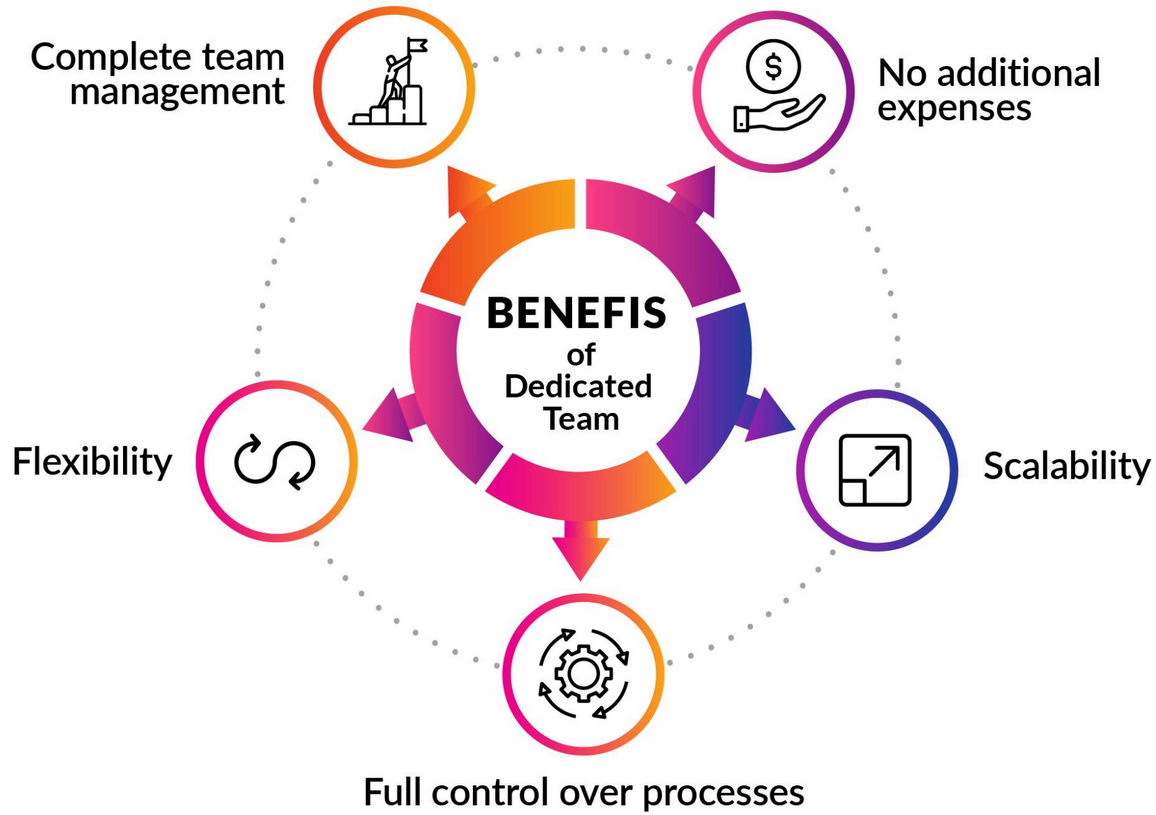

Dedicated Model

The dedicated model is a more complicated method to project development than others. In this situation, only the developer's working hours must be compensated. To be able to focus exclusively on your main business, you must select and assemble your own team to work on your software development project.

You can engage a developer on an hourly, part-time, or full-time basis, depending on your needs. They can work solo or in collaboration with another team.

A Dedicated Model:

- You wish to start on a long project with ambiguous criteria.
- When you are a large enterprise and looking for complicated customized solutions
- When you are looking for a transparent development service.
- When you don't want to hire staff as your in-house team and set for long-term project work.
